3. Justification and Learning Objectives for the Course. (Indicate whether required or elective, and whether it meets University Writing, and/or Language requirements) [Use as much space as necessary]

Justification: This is an elective course in the political science major. Elections are frequently studied by political scientists, and an electoral process course is a typical component of an undergraduate curriculum.

Learning Objectives:
Upon completion of this course students will be able to:
(Press enter for the next bulleted item)

- Explain why elections are essential to the democratic process.
- Discuss how the right to vote in the United States has gradually expanded over a period of time.
- Evaluate why voter turnout as a percentage of eligible voters has declined at the same time that the base of suffrage has expanded, and consider why voter turnout is lower in the United States than in most European countries.
- Describe how structural factors such as constitutional rules, unequal access to resources, and cultural ideas help determine why some groups participate more than others.
- Assess how elections affect the behavior of public officials.
- Outline the process by which a viable candidate would campaign for the office of president.
- Explain what role money plays in elections and distinguish between the effects of soft money and hard money in political campaigns.
- Evaluate the alternative theories of responsible party government, electoral competition, and electoral reward and punishment.
