3. Course Content in Outline Form if Being Changed. [Be as brief as possible, but use as much space as necessary]

OLD
This is a required course in Sociology. In many ways, sociological theory (together with Sociological Methodology) provides the tools underlying the other areas of sociology. This course introduces students to the major nineteenth and twentieth century thinkers who shaped the development of sociological theory. In exploring sociology's theoretical heritage, the course seeks also to foster an appreciation of what theory is and how necessary and useful it is for studying and understanding the social world. A major assumption of the course is that sociological theory has an eminently practical function for understanding ourselves and the world in which we live. This course will introduce the student to a variety of theoretical orientations, past and present, with an emphasis on the strengths and weaknesses of each approach. By analyzing a variety of theories, it is also hoped that the student will develop a theoretical view of her own and an analytical orientation.

NEW
The theory sequence, together with courses in methodology, provide the main tools to understanding and using other areas in sociology. The first course in a two course sequence, this course introduces students to the major nineteenth to mid-twentieth century thinkers who shaped the development of sociological theory. In exploring sociology's theoretical heritage, the course seeks also to foster an appreciation of what theory is and how necessary and useful it is for studying and understanding the social world. A major assumption of the course is that sociological theory has an eminently practical function for understanding ourselves and the world in which we live. This course will introduce the student to a variety of theoretical orientations, past and present, with an emphasis on the strengths and weaknesses of each approach.

Topics covered include:
toward theory in particular and social interaction in general.

(I) The Emergence of Sociology and the Social Sciences
(II) 1850s-1920s: the Classical Period

Justification Sociology 420 is a reworking of the current course in the curriculum, a survey course introducing the student to classical and contemporary sociological theory. The course as stands is too ambitious. Students will benefit from slowing down, and concentrating on historical thinkers and the genesis of the discipline of sociology in this first course, followed by a second course on more contemporary work in the discipline.
