4. Justification and Requirements for the Course. [Make a brief statement to justify the need for the course]

OLD

The interdisciplinary course may be an elective for a variety of majors, but especially useful for those interested in historical precedents and policies affecting this diverse ethnic group and those interested in becoming either elementary or secondary teachers in California and in a variety of culturally diverse areas in the nation. In addition, the course meets the culture of emphasis requirement for the California Multiple Subject teaching credential with a BCLAD (Bilingual Cross-Cultural Language and Academic Development) emphasis. It also serves as an initial course in the forthcoming Chicano Studies program slated for 2008. In addition, student's writing proficiency and practice will be applied through three types of writing practice (weekly reflections, historical research writing, and an analytical/evaluative piece on the chosen community service learning project, all of which meet the University writing requirements where written assignments will involve revision and multiple drafts resulting in a final written product.
