OLD

This course is an elective for students in any major. It is especially useful to students preparing to become teachers. These may be students who are in Liberal Studies or in any of the majors that prepare for subject matter knowledge such as English, mathematics and science. It can be a part of a Chicano Studies program.

The expanding Chicano/Mexicano population, especially children and adolescents in both California and our local service region, requires future educators to be knowledgeable, skillful, and cognizant of critical sociocultural issues and realities pertinent to this significant cultural population in order to be an effective educators.

Learning Objectives:

- To build an awareness of the powerful social experiences, political/historical realities, and cultural influences on the daily lives of Chicano/Mexicano children and adolescents.
- To construct pertinent cultural knowledge of Chicano/Mexicano students which impact K-12.educational experiences.
- To make personal connections to K-12 students, their families, and community-based personnel.
- To engage in a community-based setting serving Chicano/Mexicano students.
- To develop knowledge of contemporary issues related to language and culture in community and schooling contexts.

NEW

The interdisciplinary course may be an elective for a variety of majors, but especially useful for those interested in historical precedents and policies affecting this diverse ethnic group and those interested in becoming either elementary or secondary teachers in California and in a variety of culturally diverse areas in the nation. In addition, the course meets the culture of emphasis requirement for the California Multiple Subject teaching credential with a BCLAD (Bilingual Cross-Cultural Language and Academic Development) emphasis. It also serves as an initial course in the forthcoming Chicano Studies program slated for 2008. In addition, student's writing proficiency and practice will be applied through three types of writing practice (weekly reflections, historical research writing, and an analytical/evaluative piece on the chosen community service learning project, all of which meet the University writing requirements where written assignments will involve revision and multiple drafts resulting in a final written product.

The continual growth of the Chicano/Mexicano population, especially children and adolescents in California and our local service region, requires future teachers to be knowledgeable, skillful, and cognizant of critical sociocultural issues and realities pertinent to this significant cultural population in order to be an effective educators. Important historical events, policies, and contributions of often neglected Chicano history will be brought to the forefront and analyzed.

Learning Objectives

• To build an awareness of the powerful historical social experiences, realities, and cultural influences on the daily lives of Chicano/Mexicano children and adolescents.

- To construct a historical knowledge base focusing on key people, events, periods, and policies affecting children and adolescents.
- To analyze cultural manifestations within multiple social systems including migration and immigration systems, schooling practices and policies, work and health contexts, community and household structures, linguistic and communication issues, ritual and religious rites, and the arts.
- To develop knowledge of contemporary issues related to language and culture in community and schooling contexts.
- To develop students' writing proficiency by applying both expository and analytical writing skills into weekly reflective writing and summative writing projects which integrate course topics and objectives.
- To construct pertinent cultural knowledge of Chicano/Mexicano students which impact K-12.educational experiences.
- To incorporate linguistic and culturally relevant lessons into classroom practices allowing for meaningful connections to Latino students, their families, and local communities.
- To make personal connections to K-12 students, their families, and community-based personnel.
- To engage in a community-based setting serving Chicano/Mexicano students.
- 5. References. [Provide 3-5 references on which this course is based and/or support it.]

Criteria Justifications

• Emphasize interdisciplinarity by integrating content, ideas, and approaches from two or more disciplines

In order to address historical and sociocultural practices of Mexican origin youth and their families, this course will infuse a historical perspective coupled with the field of Chicano Studies. This interdisciplinary approach is required to analyze key historical and contemporary sociocultural realities of Chicana/o and Latina/o youth demographics and their respective communities. Using a historical perspective, the course will focus on how past patterns of transborder interactions through systems of migration and immigration, schooling practices and policies, cultural and familial perspectives, work and health contexts, community and household structures, linguistic and communication issues, ritual and religious rites have impacted contemporary sociocultural practices of Chicano and Mexicano youth.

• Include substantive written work consisting of in-class writing as well as outside class writing of revised prose. Examples of appropriate written work include: short papers, long papers, term papers, lab reports, documentation, disciplinary-based letters and memos, and essays.

Students' writing proficiency and practice will be applied through three types of writing practice (weekly reflections, historical research writing, and an analytical/evaluative piece on the chosen community service learning project, all of which meets and exceeds University writing requirements.
