Justification The request for GE designation is intended to boost enrollment so that the course can be offered consistently as part of the English emphasis in multicultural literature. The new course number reflects the level at which the course will be taught to students diverse in major and levels of preparation, and the prerequisite drops with that change.

Category C-2 Literature

All of the learning outcomes listed on the Course Modification Form clearly indicate that the course:

- involves the student with many Asian American works of literature
- promotes students' ability to effectively analyze and respond to works of human imagination particularly through the course's emphasis on the historical, social, cultural, and political issues out of which works of human imagination arise
- requires substantive analytical/critical writing in its assessment of learning outcomes, typically in the form of focused response papers, research papers, and written midterms and exams.

Criteria Justifications

- Justification

One argument in favor of approving for C3b a course that deals with the literary tradition of a single culture is that each of these courses includes many examples of diversity within what tends to be labeled as a single culture. A course in Chicano Literature, for example, must begin with an examination of terms such as Hispanic, Latino, Nuyoricano, Afrocuban, and how those terms represent different cultures or attempt to unify people marked by differences in geography, race, politics, and language. A course in African American literature will certainly include texts that represent differences between the cultures of the rural South and those of cities in the north, or between ideologies differing in their approaches to education or political engagement. A course in Asian American literature would examine ethnic differences represented in literature with cultural roots in various Asian countries. A central journal is called Studies in American Indian Literatures (plural) because it recognizes the necessity to account for the cultural differences among the many tribal nations conflated under the label Native American.

In sum, the labels we use for these courses, though standard, represent essentially multicultural traditions, and the courses as they are taught at CSUCI foreground this diversity so that any student will leave with greater understanding of the complexity of diverse cultural contributions. Furthermore, each course title and description contains the possibility of including literature from the countries of origin.

Therefore, a course in Asian American Literature

-Addresses issues, 'ways of knowing' and perspectives from at least two cultures in, for example,

Maxine Hong Kingston's attempt to understand her relationship to Chinese culture (and the challenges other Asian American writers have made to her representations), and Carlos Bulosan's representations of the Philippines and Filipino American culture, and in the Indonesian heritage of the poet Li-Young Lee.
