3.	Justification and Requirements for the Course. (Make a brief statement to justify the need for the course) A. Justification: The body of literature read in this upper division survey course provides students in English, Performing Arts, and across CSUCI with a breadth and awareness of performance texts by authors around the world, particularly in non-Western regions. It brings to the students' attention the significant contribution that non-Western cultures have made to literature and performance. The nature of this interdisciplinary course complements the other cross-listed and upper division English and Performing Arts elective courses specializing in drama and theatre. This is an elective 3 unit GE course in C2 and UDIGE.
	B. Degree Requirement: Requirement for the Major/Minor Elective for the Major/Minor Note: Submit Program Modification if this course changes your program.
4.	 Learning Objectives. (Bullets, will occur upon carriage return) Upon completion of the course, the student will be able to: Articulate common elements in dramatic literature across time, space, and culture Discuss differences across texts and performances of these texts Analyze a theme or themes using multiple performance texts Articulate the perspective they, the students, bring to the theme/texts, and reflect on how their (largely Western) perspective affects their reading and understanding of the literature, theatre, and culture represented Analyze texts as works of literature and vehicles for performance.
5.	 Course Content in Outline Form. [Be as brief as possible, but use as much space as necessary] I. Read and discuss performance texts in light of the theme(s) for the course. II. Produce critical/analytical writing in response to certain assigned texts for class reading. III. Write a research paper analyzing the cultural, literary and performative aspects of the plays. IV. Evaluate and discuss world drama and theatre within locally significant perspectives as well as international points of view. V. Issues to be discussed will include exile and migration, dialect and creolization, postcoloniality and the politics of literary form and performance theory VI. Perform staged readings of extracts from the plays. VII. Mid-Term and Final exams based on class lectures, discussions and prescribed readings.
	If YES, what course(s) and provide a justification of the overlap? Does this course overlap a course offered in another academic area? YES _ NO _ If YES, what course(s) and provide a justification of the overlap?

Request for PATH 344: World Drama and Theatre to be added to GE Category C2: Literature submitted

Committee Response: Approved by committee on 12-01-2008

Criteria and Justifications Submitted:

- Develop students' ability to respond subjectively as well as objectively to experience Students will read plays and performance texts written by non-Western authors. This course is regional in organization rather than chronological. Students study a range of non-Western dramatic literature in the context of non-Western performance traditions. For their analyses students will discuss theoretical narratives and paradigms, and consider them in light of their own personal perspectives. Students will be encouraged to develop their own individual viewpoints.
- Cultivate and refine students' affective, cognitive, and physical faculties through studying great works of the human imagination
 The material studied will include plays and performance texts in performance and production by non-Western authors, and is organized around one or more themes in order to develop aesthetic awareness.
 The works will be primarily of a verbal nature, and will include visual components, such as viewings of productions and performance traditions associated with the texts. Students will have the opportunity to research, present oral presentations, and produce staged readings.
- Increase awareness and appreciation in the tradition humanistic disciplines such as art, dance, drama, literature, and music.
 The focus of this course is the analysis of dramatic literature by studying how it is treated in performance and production, and how it integrates the different forms of the performing arts, such as music, dance, and theatre. Students will view staged productions and read relevant critical and theoretical literature.
- Examine the interrelationship between the creative arts, the humanities, and self
 This course connects the performing arts (music, dance, and theatre) with dramatic literature through analysis, discussion and research. Students will have the opportunity to contextualize the performances and productions from diverse non-Western regions of the world, against their own personal experiences and observations, and invest their own opinions in the discussions.
- Include an exposure to world cultures

 Texts studied in this course feature the following regions: Asia, Oceania, South Asia & Middle East, Africa, and Latin America. In this course students will develop an understanding of world perspectives by reading critical and theoretical literature from these regions, and viewing performances and productions of world drama in different cultures both in English, in translation and in the original language. Students will evaluate the influence of these different performance traditions upon Western drama, and also discuss the impact of Western drama, including that of the United States, on the drama and theatre of the aforementioned cultures.
- *Involve the student with literary works*The very nature of this course is to evaluate and discuss non-Western dramatic literature and theatre conttextualized within contemporary and historically significant perspectives. Students will discuss literary forms, dramatic criticism and performance theories in reference to the plays read in the course.
- Promote students' ability to effectively analyze and respond to works of human imagination
 In addition to reading, and discussing the primary works, students will be provided with secondary materials, such as historical, theoretical and critical references, for their use. Students will also develop their own personal reactions. To better understand non-Western drama and theatre, opportunities will be created for the students to write, speak, and perform staged readings of extracts from the plays.

• Require substantive analytical/critical thinking
Students will read critically and analyze several literary texts, and express their interpretations of literary texts in oral and written form. They will discuss differences across texts and performances of these texts, and also analyze a theme using multiple performance texts. Students will study the texts as works of literature and as vehicles for performance. Students will identify the uniqueness and commonality of these writers' accomplishments. They will explore their own place in both their own and in the wider theatrical and cultural landscape.

Request for PATH 344: World Drama and Theatre to be added to GE Category UDIGE: Upper Division Interdisciplinary GE

Committee Response:
Approved by committee on 12-01-2008

Criteria and Justifications Submitted:

- Emphasize interdisciplinarity by integrating content, ideas, and approaches from two or more disciplines
 - This is a cross-listed course with English. Literary forms, theories, and criticisms will provide a context for the discussion of these plays in performance and production. The ways in which literary trends shaped the dramaturgical choices employed by the playwright(s) will be discussed. Dramatic criticism and performance theories will shed light on the literary analysis of the plays read in the course.
- Include substantive written work consisting of in-class writing as well as outside class writing of revised prose. Examples of appropriate written work include: short papers, long papers, term papers, lab reports, documentation, disciplinary-based letters and memos, and essays.

 As part of their assessment students will have to research critical and theoretical prose to write a - comprehensive term paper. Mid-term and Final exams will include short and long essays. Students will also write personal responses to the plays and performance pieces studied in class. There will also be oral presentations and staged readings.
