4. Justification and Requirements for the Course. [Make a brief statement to justify the need for the course]

OLD
Peace studies is a field that draws on many disciplines to question the dominant approaches to social and international challenges. This course will help POLS majors and minors, as well as other students, think about creative, unconventional ways of addressing local, national, and international conflicts.

- Requirement for the Major/Minor
- Elective for the Major/Minor
- Free Elective

Submit Program Modification if this course changes your program.

5. Student Learning Outcomes. (List in numerical order. You may wish to visit resource information at the following website: http://senate.csuci.edu/comm/curriculum/resources.htm)

Upon completion of the course, the student will be able to:

OLD
- Identify the core normative philosophy of the field of peace studies
- Explain the causes of war at several levels of analysis
- Differentiate between the ideas of positive peace and negative peace
- Describe and analyze cases in the past century in which conflict was resolved without violence

NEW
- Identify the core normative philosophy of the field of peace studies and critique that approach in comparison with that of other fields
- Synthesize causes of war across levels of analysis in a written exploration of a particular conflict case
- Differentiate between the ideas of positive peace and negative peace
• Critique a contemporary conflict in terms of the theories and concepts exposed to in the course
• Develop specific ways in which contemporary challenges we face within our national and global society can be addressed peacefully
• Deconstruct a case of negative peace by applying the concept of positive peace through performance or art
• Find an analysis of a conflict situation written from a the perspective of a single discipline (historic account, sociology study, etc.), apply an interdisciplinary view, and in written form describe how the perspectives provide distinct insights about causes and solutions
• Describe and analyze cases in the past century in which conflict was resolved without violence
• Assess a case study of a conflict and recommend proposals based on approaches found in peace studies literature

6. Course Content in Outline Form. (Be as brief as possible, but use as much space as necessary)

OLD

Last day to submit forms to be considered during the current academic year: April 15th.
Request for POLS 334: Peace Studies to be added to GE Category D: Social Perspectives

Committee Response:
Approved by committee on 11-03-2010

Criteria and Justifications Submitted:

- Promote understanding of how the issues relevant to social, political, contemporary/historical, economic, educational or psychological realities interact with each other within the realm of human experience
  This course examines the social, political, historical, economic, and psychological roots of conflict and war. Thus students will examine in depth how peace requires both understanding these multiple causes and learning how factors from these levels of analysis must be manipulated to bring about peace. For example, if one psychological factor making war and killing possible is dehumanization of the enemy, then working toward peace means finding ways to humanize the enemy and emphasize common humanity.

- Focus on how a social science discipline conceives and studies human existence
  The causes of war and peace are discussed as factors or variables. Students should leave the course understanding that any model explaining a problem must contain multiple dimensions and factors from various levels of analysis. The case studies used in the course are used to help students understand the conditions under which particular variables may or may not explain violent or nonviolent behavior.

- Address issues using the methods commonly employed by a social science discipline
  The course uses historical analysis and case studies to illustrate and test theories. Students will also read about many studies which explore research questions about war and peace with quantitative analysis, and the instructor will facilitate understanding of those methods.
Request for POLS 334: Peace Studies to be added to GE Category UDIGE: Upper Division Interdisciplinary GE.

Committee Response:
Approved by committee on 11-03-2010

Criteria and Justifications Submitted:

- Emphasize interdisciplinarity by integrating content, ideas, and approaches from two or more disciplines
  Peace studies is an inherently interdisciplinary enterprise. For example, students will read work in which authors take historical views of conflict, investigate psychological factors, and analyze institutional causes that exacerbate divisions. We will approach questions of positive and negative peace by looking at various levels of analysis—the international system and the state (involving history and political science, for example), the society (sociology, social psychology), and the individual (psychology). Students will apply theories from at least two disciplines in a case study.

- Include substantive written work consisting of in-class writing as well as outside class writing of revised prose. Examples of appropriate written work include: short papers, long papers, term papers, lab reports, documentation, disciplinary-based letters and memos, and essays.
  Students will engage in writing short papers as reflections on various texts—films, poetry, music, academic articles. Students will write papers about cases they read, applying various theoretical approaches. Students will engage in extended analysis of a particular case of their choosing; oral presentations of these term papers will also be a requirement.
